BROOM CORN.

A few weeks ago G. H. M. nrged farmers to plant broom corn Iu this connection the following from the News and Courier of the 8th of December will be of special intere-t:

In the course of three weeks in October, it is reported, $1.400,000 in cash was paid out in the little town of Arcola, Illinois, a place of 2 500 inhabitants, to the farmers of the neighberhood for their crops of broom corn. The buyers were the agents of the broom manufacturers. The price of the product at the beginning of the season was $60 a ton. Later it ro-e to $100 and even higher. The average cost of raising the crop on land renting at $5 an acre, it is stated, is about $38 a ton.

We note these several reported facts for the sake of whatever interest they may have for farmers in these parts. For several years part we have advised farmers in South Carolina to experiment with the crop is question, and we repeated the advice last year, in time to allow it to be applied to this year's crop operations. Any of our agricultural triends who so applied it doubtless have good reason to congratulate themselves on having done so. We renew the suggestion now in good time for its application next season, which is several months off.

A crop which will bring $1,400,000, or the half of that sum, into a neighborhood or county or district every year, is a crop worth cultivating. And broom corn is a crop that can be grown in nearly all parts of South Carolina. We have been told by a farmer who was familiar with the crop as grown in New York, that the finest specimens of it he had ever seen were grown in the low country, in this State. It is not hard to cultivate. The general requirements, we believe, are about the same as those for corn or sorghum cane. Some of our progressive farmers should give it a fair trial. The exp riment will not cost much, and it may lead to comfortable develpments.

THE second battle at Moddle River resulting in a terrible British defeat in the midst of Christmas preparations way to Manila with the 38th Regiment will more than ever convince the to write it. British that they will have no walk over in South Africa. It is interesting to note what outside newspapers including the British press have had to say about the war even before this the fields.

The London Saturday Review has begun to discredit reports. It says: "Rumors that the Orange Free State Boers are returning to their farms must be received with extreme caution," but it thinks that "the Boers probably begin to realize now that they cannot win in the end." Since this was written the Boers have had much to encourage them.

"It is all very well to talk of mobilizing another army corps; but the thing is not easily done. Great Britain has a great number of battalions which need only men to make them as mag nificent as they appear on pape. Their war strength is supposed to be 1,000 men. In time of peace they number hardly 400. An army corphas three divisions of 12,000 men; with the fifth division, which is at present being lorganized, there would be 48.000 men. At present, Great Britain has only 41 battalions of infantry left, with very little cavalry and less articlery. Deducting the un fit and those who are already sint or designed to be sent to fill the gap- in Africa, only 12,300 regulars of the infautry remain. The reserves will vield, at the highest, 30,000 men. If these 13,000 men are sent to Africa, England remains noprotected. If she lisiens to her most prudent adviser, Major Griffich, who warns her that unforeseen trouble may arise, epecially in Ireland, she will not send more than the fifth division."

KEISTLER-GLADDEN.

On last Thursday evening, the 14th, Bethesda church presented to the eye a lovely picture, for "merrily rang the bells," joyous wedding bells. The church was beautifully decorated in cedar, holly and flowers of all kinds. In front of the pulpit was an arch made of cedar, over which hung a graceful drapery of pink silk. Just back of this was a festoon of cedar flowers and white ribbon.
